- A multicultural workplace fosters creativity, ingenuity and competition in the global market. The UK workplace is increasingly becoming more diverse with new immigrants who offer a valued, professional skill base for growing companies. However, the ability to communicate effectively in English can be a barrier for new English speakers. Employers can help non-native employees learn English in a number of ways that will not only provide a shared mutual benefit, but a greater understanding of language and culture
- Language training for your staff is not only directly beneficial to your organisation but also acts as an excellent employee benefit. Language training enables staff not only gain a new skill but to develop personally and professionally. Group language courses have the added benefit of providing an opportunity for team building which helps to improve internal communication, morale and productivity
